CLUE(3/3)

However, a police agrees a dramatic shift in the community has made residents think twice about living in the area for much longer.

Inspector AE, the neighborhood policing inspector for the Radford area, emphasized that when individuals remark on a neighborhood's decline, they're often observing shifts in broader societal trends rather than localized changes. He highlighted that there hasn't been a significant increase in anti-social behavior in Radford specifically, but rather it reflects shifts in society as a whole.

He pointed out that crime rates have decreased by 20% citywide and countywide, attributing this success to increased police presence in Radford. The initiative includes proactive measures like Operation Reacher, which collaborates closely with the neighborhood policing team to address community concerns and reduce crime.

Thanks to these efforts, recorded crime, including robbery and burglary, has decreased in the Radford and Park neighborhoods. Inspector AE reiterated the commitment to community safety and encouraged residents to engage with local officers, report criminal activity, and participate in surveys like the neighborhood What Matters survey and Neighbourhood Alert. He emphasized the importance of direct communication with law enforcement to prioritize community needs effectively.
