CLUE(2/3)

However, this has created tension between residents - some of them saying that the arrival of immigrants and students in the area has stolen Radford's charm.

EM, now retired at 79, expressed his dissatisfaction with the noise disturbances caused by students residing in the area, often lasting until four in the morning. He noted that Radford's experience varies depending on one's age group, suggesting that younger residents exhibit peculiar behavior.

More and more residents added that they no longer feel safe living in Radford, and called for increased police presence on the streets.

KA, aged 64, voiced the need for increased police presence in the neighborhood, emphasizing a decline in safety. She expressed discomfort walking alone at night due to perceived risks, reflecting sentiments shared by other residents who feel that Radford has deteriorated over time.

One long-term resident, contemplating a move after 25 years in the area, echoed these concerns. Additionally, MK, a 45-year-old retail worker, lamented the loss of the once pleasant atmosphere in Radford and expressed fear about continuing to reside there.
